Welcome!

Thank you for your interest in joining SEND Tuition with Hannah's Hub. We are a growing group of specialist SEND tutors supporting children and young people across Yorkshire through highly personalised, relationship-based tuition that is holistic, tailored, and neurodiversity affirming.

We are passionate about helping learners grow in confidence, independence, and self-belief. Our tutors work with an understanding of each child's unique strengths, needs, interests, and learning style, and we aim to match every learner with the most appropriate tutor for their goals.

About us

Founded by Hannah, a Leeds-based SEND tutor with extensive experience across primary, secondary, special school, resourced provision, and alternative provision settings, Hannah's Hub was created in response to growing demand from families for specialist support.

Our approach is built around three core principles:

- Holistic support that considers the whole child.
- Tailored planning that reflects strengths, needs, interests, and learning style.
- Neurodiversity affirming practice that helps learners understand how they learn best and build confidence in themselves.

The role

We are looking for committed, experienced tutors to join our network and support learners with SEND in home-based or other agreed settings. Sessions may focus on academic progress, confidence building, re-engagement with learning, or support linked to wider educational goals depending on the learner's needs. Tutors must be able to work flexibly, adaptively, and with a warm, professional approach.

As part of Hannah's Hub, tutors benefit from being part of a values-led and collaborative group of professionals. We aim to match tutors thoughtfully to learners based on specialism, personality, and tuition goals, so that each child receives the right kind of support. We value consistency, professionalism, and a shared commitment to helping learners feel understood and capable

Who we are looking for

We would love to hear from applicants who:

- Have experience teaching children or young people with SEND.
- Can build positive, trusting relationships with learners.
- Understand the importance of adapting learning to individual strengths and needs.
- Are confident working independently while following agreed plans and safeguarding procedures.
- Communicate clearly and professionally with families and the wider support team.

Experience in any area of SEND is valuable for our clients, including neurodiversity, autism, ADHD, PDA, SEMH, speech and language needs, dyslexia, dyspraxia, severe, moderate or profound and multiple learning disabilities. We also welcome applications from tutors with expertise in teaching learners wirh any other special educational needs and disabilities.

Working arrangements

Tutors work with us on a self-employed basis. Before starting any placement, we will agree the expectations for sessions, communication, planning, reporting, travel, and safeguarding. Tutors must maintain professional standards at all times.
As self-employed workers, tutors are responsible for their own tax and national insurance payments, and do not receive holiday pay or pension.

Self-employed tutors are responsible for planning, resourcing and assessment for the learners they work with, as well as for keeping families and carers updated about their child's progress.

Hannah's Hub operates as an employment agency. The business covers all costs of marketing and administration. Clients pay for tuition via the TutorCruncher platform, and this money is split, with 88% going to the tutor, and 12% to Hannah's Hub. This may vary for local authority contracts, where the additional administration time and costs required mean that Hannah's Hub may take between 12-25% of the client fee.

How much work is available?

The amount of work available can be difficult to predict, and depends on the demand in your local area as well as your experience and availability. If you are looking for full time tuition work we recommend that you register with more than one agency, as larger organisations can usually offer work more quickly and ensure you have the hours you need. It may take longer to build up hours through Hannah's Hub, but roles are more generously paid than many larger agencies, and tend to be longer term.

How roles are assigned

When a new role is available, I create a job outline. This gives an overview of the needs of the learner, their age and learning levels, goals for tuition, and any other relevant information, as well as the location and hours needed.
The job outline and hourly rate is then sent to the most appropriate tutor for the child or young person's needs, and the learner's location. Whether you choose to accept the jobs you receive or not is entirely up to you. If you choose not to take it, it will be offered to other tutors in the Hub.

Safeguarding and professionalism

Safeguarding and promoting the welfare of children is central to our work, especially as much of our tuition takes place in learners' homes or other non-school settings. All tutors must follow our safeguarding policy, report concerns immediately, and maintain clear professional boundaries at all times. We expect tutors to use sound judgement, keep accurate records where required, and act in the best interests of the child at all times. Safeguarding background checks, including an enhanced DBS with children's barred list check are carried out on all successful candidates before they can be onboarded as a Hannah's Hub tutor.
